ON HERBERT HOOVER

By Rintaro Naoki,

Chief of Engineering, Reconstruction Bureau of Japan.

The difficult postwar problems relating to humanity were indeed solved in a large measure by an engineer, Herbert Hoover. After the great War the peoples of Germany and in fact of all the European countries were carrying on a very bitter struggle for existence, miserable underfed children were to be found every where. Here the man who resolutely shouldered the burden for the relief of these innumerable suffering children was Herbert Hoover. Sacrificing a good part of his fortune, he accomplished this great work of humanity by his earnest appeal to the people of United States.

As to Hoover's fame throughout the world as an American mining engineer through his ability and personality, I have already expressed my view several years ago. Now when we are confronted with a time of doing real work here, I can not help but feel the need of having a real practical man of personality as Herbert Hoover.
